DC nonprofit organizations recognized contributions of the IDB
Press Release
October 20, 2008

The Latino leaders of the Washington Metropolitan Area nonprofit organizations this week recognized a decade of contributions of the Inter-American Development Bank (through its IDB-DC Solidarity Program) to the Latino and Caribbean communities in DC with a special tribute to IDB President, Luis A. Moreno.

Moreno took the opportunity to announce an additional contribution of $340,000 over two years to help these communities through the current economic downturn. "We are all aware of the existing economic challenges and how they are impacting our community, and thus we need to find ways of supporting them," said Moreno.

Leaders from the main nonprofit organizations that serve the Latino and Caribbean communities acknowledged the economic and development support provided by this international entity that seeks to be responsive to the community in which it resides and operates.

Since 1998, the IDB-DC Solidarity Program has awarded more than $2,886,000 in grants in areas such as childcare, youth development, business development, health, education, immigration, employment, and rehabilitation and violence prevention. The Program also supports the organizations through grant making, volunteerism, special drives and initiatives and the donation of surplus equipment.
